The Bronx hip hop scene emerged in the mid-1970's from neighborhood parties thrown by the Black Spades, an African-American group that described as being a gang, a social club, and a music group. Brother-sister duo Afrika Bambaataa and Grandmaster Flash were also prominent figures in the Bronx hip hop scene. Grandmaster Flash, whose real name was Kool Herc, was a DJ who developed the breakbeat technique, which involved playing two records simultaneously and fading one out while the other continues. This technique allowed him to extend the length of a record and create a continuous beat. He also used turntables to mix records and create new sounds. Herc's style influenced many other DJs and helped to establish the foundation for hip hop music.
